DRYDOCK PLANS FOR COAST ARE WELL ADVANCED

Full details of the plan for a big drydock at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco, came in coast newspapers arriving yesterday, and disclose the fact that on the coast it is not expected that the Pearl Harbor drydock will be completed for a long time, if at all. The San Francisco Examiner of December 8 says: A gigantic drydock, costing two and a half millions, will be built at the Union Iron Works on San Francisco harbor for Uncle Sam's fighting ships.

Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels has made his recommendation that the government enter into extraordinary contracts with private dock owners in order that the battle ships in Pacific waters may be assured of accommodation after the opening of the Panama canal, and as soon as the plan is approved by the nation's lawmakers, the huge project will be started. Work will start as soon as Congress has sanctioned the contract.

When the dock is finished the largest drydock in the world will be able to find accommodation in this harbor, and all repair work will be done on the country's best fighting vessels within the limits of this city. Has to Seek Private Concern.

The United States has been forced to seek the co-operation of private concerns through the utter lack of drydock facilities on the Pacific coast. The collapse of the great Pearl Harbor dock in Hawaii, which was to be the mainstay of the navy on the Pacific, and the inaccessibility of the Mare Island navy yard basins until a great amount of dredging has been done have reduced the naval resources on the west coast to one dock at Puget sound, entirely too distant from the Panama canal, to meet naval needs.

It has been found necessary, therefore, for the navy department to plan for the accommodation of its big warships with private corporations, and particularly with the Union Iron Works, which already owns docks on San Francisco harbor.

Former Secretary of the Navy Meyers, when he was here last February, discussed the question with President John A. McGregor of the Union Iron Works, and after that interview a proposal was submitted to Congress, only to be blocked in the house committee. The same plan has been revived in the recent visit of Secretary of the Navy Daniels, and the prospect is bright that Congress will uphold the idea and sanction the extraordinary contract with the Union Iron Works.

Will Be 1,100 Feet Long. The drydock planned by the Union Iron Works is to be 1,100 feet long, 120 feet wide and 35 feet deep. The present dock is 780 feet long. The contemplated dock will be big enough to accommodate the largest fighting ships that Uncle Sam proposes to build.

"Yes," said President McGregor yesterday, "we are only waiting for Congress to sanction the plan. We will be ready to start the work as soon as the contract is signed. The drydock will take two years to build. It won't be ready for the opening of the Panama canal, but will be built in time for the reception of the war vessels which the government will place here when it carries out the plan to station half the navy in Pacific waters."

WARRING CHINESE WILL ARBITRATE THEIR TROUBLES

A compromise between the opposing factions of the United Chinese Society, who have been separately struggling for the supremacy of the organization, may be reached today at a conference of the parties with Woo Huan, the new Chinese consul.

Asked by the Tung Ming Wui faction—the faction which attempted to hold the election Monday behind locked doors, barring from entrance members of the majority party—to sit as arbitrator of the differences, Consul Woo Huan has called the conference for this afternoon, and representatives have been appointed from both sides to attend it.

The consul, prior to the election and even during it, applied to the role of peacemaker, but the high pitch of excitement and interest was too strong at first for his proposals to be acted on. Now, however, that it is shown that the life of the society is threatened, and each side recognizing that it has gained something and lost something, a compromise is in sight. The majority party feels that it is in a better position than the Tung Mings, and will probably insist at the conference on many of the points it has contended for right along.

One of these points is to give all members of the society the right of franchise to be exercised at the annual elections. It has been customary they say, for elections of this kind to be participated in by all members, voting by acclamation, though by the by-laws, this right is not fixed. The majority party, claiming control of the board of managers, expects to amend the by-laws in this respect.

The news that the Union Iron Works will spend nearly three millions in developing its drydock facilities means much for labor in this city. Ever since Charles Schwab purchased the big plant and caused the greater part of it to go into idleness, the shipbuilding industry flagged here. But with the prospect of the huge plan being put into execution there is every assurance that an immense number of men will be put to work at an early date.
